

Mad River
Theater Works

presents

FREEDOM BOUND

Study Guide

with the generous support of
The Martha Holden Jennings Foundation
Dayton Power and Light
Honda of America Manufacturing
The Della Selsor Trust

About the Company

Mad River Theater Works is a professional touring theater company based in West Liberty, Ohio. Our purpose is to craft plays that are both drawn from and produced for the people of the farms and small towns of rural America, and to communicate the concerns and insights of our communities to people everywhere. Since 1978 we have collected stories, molded this material into plays, and performed our work at community centers, schools, colleges, and theaters throughout the United States reaching an annual audience of over 50,000 through over 200 performances.

Mad River Theater Works is one of only a handful of professional theaters in the United States based in rural communities. Our unique mission has attracted the support of the National Endowment for the Arts, as well as foundations, corporations, and individuals.

Special Support

Mad River Theater Works is particularly grateful for the generous ongoing support of Honda of America, Manufacturing. Honda has been the primary sponsor of the school touring programs of Mad River Theater Works for the past ten years. Their assistance has made this program possible.

The Artists

Jeff Hooper (Playwright) has written over twenty-five original scripts for Mad River Theater Works including Captive Heart, John Henry, Freedom Bound, Wings of Courage, and The Legend of Casey Jones. He also collaborated with Native American Poet Lance Henson to create Cry of the Americas and Coyote Road and directed the premiere of John Olive's Evelyn and the Polka King at the Humana Festival of New American Plays at Actors Theatre of Louisville in 1992. Coyote Road has been translated into French and was presented in 2001 at the Theatre Montansier in Versailles, France. He was awarded an Ohio Arts Council Playwriting Fellowship in 1989-90 and has served on numerous panels for the National Endowment for the Arts, the Ohio Arts Council, the Massachusetts Cultural Council, and the Florida Arts Commission. He is also a site reporter for the NEA.

Bob Lucas (Composer, Udney Hyde) comes from a singing family tradition. He is a rhythm guitarist, banjo player, old time fiddler and has a rich tenor voice, spanning over three octaves. As a composer and lyricist with Mad River Theater Works, he has collaborated with playwright Jeff Hooper to create Freedom Bound, Black Hats, A Christmas Carol, and Evelyn and the Polka King and has acted as musical director and performed in those plays and many others. Bob was music director and performed in Evelyn and the Polka King at Actors Theater of Louisville, Steppenwolf Theatre, Chicago, and City Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Moreover, Bob is a songwriter whose words and tunes have been praised by "Melody Maker" and "Pickin" Magazine, and two of his songs appear on Alison Kraus' Grammy award winning album New Favorite. Bob's first album, The Dancer Inside You, received a 4-star rating from "Downbeat" Magazine and Bob has recently released a new CD with his daughter Chloe, Kin. Bob's musical expertise encompasses folk, bluegrass, swing, rock, and spiritual music of many genres.

Ernest Jordan (Addison White) has been a member of Mad River Theater Works since his appearance in the 1995 tour of Freedom Bound. With Mad River, Ernest has played leading roles in John Henry, Liberty Line, Wings of Courage and Captive Heart as well as participating in numerous school residency projects. Other past performances include the Ohio Lyric Theatre's Some Enchanted Evening and Kiss Me Kate, First Frontiers' Blue Jacket as Spybuck, Robin Hood Players National Touring Theatre Company's Thomas Jefferson, and Yellow Springs Center Stage's Fences as Gabriel. Ernest holds a BA in Theatre from Wright State University. In addition to Ernest's work in theater, he has worked as a professional TV cameraman and as a professional tennis player.

Christopher Westhoff (Daniel White, Marshal, Guitar) is a multi-instrumentalist, actor, and educator. He attended Hampshire College, in Amherst, Massachusetts, where he received a B.A. in documentary studies. After graduating, Chris developed and facilitated a documentary arts program at a federally funded GED program for at-risk-youth in Holyoke, Massachusetts. He relocated to the Midwest in 2005 to join Mad River Theater Works. In addition to his work in the performing arts, he has worked as an art handler, installer and administrator at the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, The Henry Ford, and The University of Michigan Museum of Art. As a lover of story and song, Christopher is proud to be a part of the Mad River team.

Jamey Reid (Drums and Percussion), is a musician and composer, who was featured in the Indiana Repertory Theatre production of Freedom Bound, the only Freedom Bound production not presented by Mad River Theater Works, as well as past touring productions by Mad River. Jamey holds a BM and a MM in Music Performance from Indiana University (IU) in Bloomington. While at IU, he performed with the Singing Hoosiers on a European tour of Greece and Yugoslavia, and appeared with the IU Symphony Orchestra in Laroque, France. He served as percussionist for Daedalus Productions' United States and Canadian tour of Little Shop of Horrors. One of the strangest locations Jamey has performed is at the North Pole during a tour sponsored by the Department of Defense. In addition to playing with many bands over the years, he toured nationally and has made two recordings during his five years with the band Mojo Hand. Mojo Hand was a featured performer at the Sedona JazzOn-The-Rocks Festival in Sedona, Arizona, and performed alongside Gary Burton, Tuck and Patty, Gerry Mulligan, and Diane Shurr.

Chloe Manor (Amanda) has been appearing on stage since she could walk. She is a banjo-playing ballad-collecting songstress. Growing up amidst a professional performing environment, she honed the skills of theater, traditional song, and dance at a young age and has been at it ever since. She has performed extensively with her stepfather, Bob Lucas and has been featured in a number of Mad River Theater Works productions over the years. Together, she and Bob produced a homespun full-length recording of original material in 2002 as well as two collaborative albums with her brother, singer-songwriter Austin Lucas in 2007 and 2009. They have toured together throughout the United States and Europe.

Synopsis

Freedom Bound tells the true story of the escape of Addison White from slavery in Kentucky, his flight north on the Underground Railroad, and his rescue by the citizens of Mechanicsburg, Ohio. The characters of Addison White and Udney Hyde serve as narrators as well as characters.

The play begins in August, 1856. Addison is a slave on the farm of Daniel White in Fleming County, Kentucky. We learn about what it was like to be a slave: long hours of work and no human dignity. One day, Addison is grinding cane at a sorghum wheel and he faints from heatstroke. Daniel White finds him and is going to tie him up and beat him. Addison resists, fighting Master White to a draw.

The scene shifts to Ohio. We learn that while Addison is suffering in slavery, Udney Hyde has been moving slaves north on the Underground Railroad for several years. His activities have aroused the suspicion of Federal Marshals. We find out that Hyde has been forced to “retire” from his dangerous mission and bought a small farm just outside of town. His farming is not successful, however. He has broken his leg and is unable to work.

UDNEY HYDE

Addison makes a plan to run away from Master White. He knows that his life is in danger. He describes his efforts to try to get others to go with him. He heads north alone.

When Addison arrives at the Hyde cabin, Udney and his daughter Amanda are arguing about Udney’s wish to continue to help slaves move north. Amanda has moved in with Udney to help him while he recovers. Amanda feels that his efforts are exposing him to too much danger. Udney is oblivious. Addison interrupts and Udney welcomes him over Amanda’s objections. Addison is anxious to keep moving, but Udney tells Addison that he is as safe in Mechanicsburg as he would be farther North in Ohio. Addison is overjoyed, but Udney continues to explain that because of the Fugitive Slave Act, he isn’t really safe in any Northern state. Udney is disgusted by the hypocritical system of justice that outlaws slavery but allows blacks to be arrested and returned to the South. Udney asks Addison to stay for a short time and help him on the farm. Amanda objects but Addison agrees.

Addison and Amanda are immediately drawn to each other. Amanda learns that Addison left a wife and family in Kentucky. He has said he will write as soon as he is settled. She gets Addison a pen and paper, but discovers he doesn't know how to read or write. She resolves to teach him and gives him a gift, a copy of The Columbian Orator, a book of famous speeches. Addison expresses his appreciation, and explains to the audience how the power of reading has opened up new worlds.

In the meantime, Daniel White has discovered that Addison is in Mechanicsburg. Udney learns of the danger and tells Addison it is time to go, but it is too late.

The cabin is surrounded by Federal Marshals under the direction of Daniel White in the middle of the night and they burst in. Addison is sleeping in an upstairs loft. At first, Udney denies the presence of the slave, but soon he is found out. Addison has a gun and threatens to shoot anyone who climbs up the ladder to try and arrest him. The confrontation becomes a standoff. Amanda runs out of the cabin and while Daniel White tries to decide what to do, she runs to Mechanicsburg and assembles a group of over 100 citizens who gather outside. They make it clear to Daniel White that they are there to rescue Addison and he departs.

Slavery is a dark spot on the face of the nation—Lafayette

A Note from the Author

The events portrayed in Freedom Bound are based on a true story. We first learned of Addison White and his escape from Federal Marshals when Mad River Theater Works conducted a residency in 1985 in the small town of Mechanicsburg, Ohio. Many people of the town remembered Addison's wife and heard the story of his rescue directly from her.

The factual outline of the story was well documented in the local newspapers of the day and the incident is featured in most books about the Underground Railroad in Ohio. Still, there was much about these people we could not know. The court documents mention that Addison stood up to his master, Daniel White, and fled north in fear for his life, but we do not know specifically what he did to bring on the wrath of his master. The records indicate that after Addison was rescued, Udney transferred the title to his land and went to live in the swamp. He would emerge to see his family "acting like a crazy man, with sticks in his hat and his coat covered with mud." But what does a crazy man of 1856 act like?

My goal was to bring out what I saw as the truth of this historical incident. I have not contradicted any known fact in regard to Addison, or Udney, or the story of the rescue. But the personalities of these individuals have, by necessity, been developed from the few scant facts we know about them. The family of Addison White has seen the play on a number of occasions and they are supportive of the portrayal of their ancestor.

I owe a great debt to the writings of Frederick Douglass which provided the raw material for the events of Addison's life in slavery. An escaped slave himself, Douglas was a powerful and articulate leader of the anti-slavery movement and his book, My Bondage, My Freedom is a moving account of his own mistreatment and struggle for freedom. In Freedom Bound, the details of Addison's resistance to Master White after fainting closely parallel events Douglas describes. I hope that his association strengthens the play and will inspire audiences to read the original account of Frederick Douglass and find out more about this important chapter of American history.

The custom in Washington, Capital of U. S.

The Underground Railroad

The Underground Railroad provided many African Americans who lived in the Slave States prior to and during the American Civil War assistance in escaping slavery and finding freedom. As described by Charles Blockson in Escape from Slavery: The Underground Railroad, “it was a network of paths through the woods and fields, river crossings, boats and ships, trains and wagons, all haunted by the specter of recapture.” The slaves’ flight to freedom was made possible and facilitated by the courageous men and women who believed in the right of all humans to be free from human bondage.

One characteristic of the Underground Railroad was its lack of formal organization. No one knows exactly when it started, but there were certainly isolated cases of help given to runaways as early as the 1700s. By the early 19th century, there were organized flights to freedom. Much of the early help was provided by Quaker abolitionists in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Underground operations generally relied heavily on secret codes as railroad jargon alerted “passengers” when travel was safe. Runaways usually moved either alone or in small groups and were frequently assisted by African American and White “conductors” who risked their lives and property to escort refugees to freedom.

Famous conductors of the Underground Railroad include James Fairfield, a White abolitionist who went into the Deep South and rescued enslaved African Americans by posing as a slave trader and Harriet Tubman who made 19 trips to the South and helped deliver at least 300 fellow captives and loved ones to liberation. African American abolitionist John Parker of Ripley, Ohio, frequently went to Kentucky and Virginia to help transport hundreds of runaways across the Ohio River. Perhaps the closest the underground came to being formally organized was during the 1830s when African American abolitionists William Still, Robert Purvis, and David Ruggles organized vigilance committees throughout the North to help bondsmen to freedom. The intention of the vigilance committees was not to lure or personally guide runaways to freedom, but to offer whatever assistance they needed to reach their destinations.

The Fugitive Slave Act

The Fugitive Slave Act was signed by President Millard Fillmore on September 18, 1850. It provided that any Federal Marshal should arrest alleged runaway slaves or face a fine of $1,000. Fugitive slaves or suspects could be detained without a warrant and turned over to a slave owner on nothing more than the owner's sworn testimony. A black fugitive or captured free man could not ask for a jury trial or testify in his own behalf. Any person aiding a runaway slave by giving him shelter, food or any sort of assistance was liable to six months' imprisonment and a $1,000 fine. Federal Marshals capturing fugitives were entitled to a generous fee and often unscrupulous Marshals became kidnapers of free Negroes. It was easy to find greedy claimants who would falsely swear to ownership.

Despair and panic swept over the colored population of the North when the Fugitive Slave Act was passed. It was estimated that more than 50,000 fugitives had found shelter above the Mason-Dixon Line. Many had married free Negroes. Now, no Negro felt safe. As their leader Frederick Douglass said, "Under this law the oaths of any two villains (the capturer and the claimant) are sufficient to confine a free man to slavery for life."

Thousands of Negroes in the North fled overnight to Canada. Some of the more active black abolitionists went to England. Armed clashes frequently developed between zealous slave catchers and abolitionists.

Northern writers such as Wendell Phillips, Lowell, Whittier, Emerson and Thoreau thundered denunciations of the Fugitive Slave Act while Southerners continually complained that it was not being adequately enforced. Threatening secession and a boycott of Northern industries and trade, the South demanded that both federal and state officers enforce the Fugitive Slave Act but the government never succeeded in enforcing the Act in the North.

Addison and Amanda White

by his grandchildren

This is a story about our grandfather and grandmother, Addison and Amanda White. We, their grandchildren, are very proud to be a part of the legacy they left.

Addison was a very large man and had a great impact on all he met. Addison came from Kentucky via the Underground Railroad. Addison reached Mechanicsburg, Ohio with the help of numerous people including Mr. Udney Hyde. Mr. Hyde's daughter taught Addison to read and Addison worked for them on the farm.

The town of Mechanicsburg bought Addison for $950 after his master realized that he was never going to get his property back. Addison served in the Army from 1862-1864 with Co. E, 54th Regiment in Massachusetts, having joined in Canada. Addison then married Amanda after having seen her sitting on a porch in Kentucky and promising to come back for her. Amanda came to Ohio and immediately started cooking for a professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield, Ohio. Later she moved to Mechanicsburg, married Addison, and opened a restaurant.

Addison White

Amanda would cook roastin' ears for the children in the neighborhood and, while they ate on the front porch, she would tell them stories. She never refused anyone a meal. She fed hoboes and tramps. She never seemed to be afraid of anyone who happened along.

Amanda was an avid church-goer and saw to it that all the young children were in church on Sunday.

We are still being told stories about these two wonderful people and we do pass them along to our children and grandchildren. It gives us all great feelings and for some wonderful memories of these two.

Addison and Amanda had one daughter, our mother, Annie. Annie had eight children of which five are still alive: Robert, John, Martha, Phyllis, and Charlotte. Of these five, there are sixteen grandchildren.

Suggested Activities

1. Find out more about the Underground Railroad. Explore why this network of individuals throughout the border states was compared to a railroad.

2. Have the students compare their own childhoods to that of a slave. How would it be to work all day with no time for play? Compare shelter and food conditions and discuss the fear of being sold away from their families.

3. Play some of the spirituals that slaves sang to express their longing for freedom. Help the students understand the words so they will be aware of the reasons these songs were sung.

4. Look at a map and find the Mason-Dixon Line. Identify the free and slave states. Then trace the paths of the Underground Railroad and figure out how far slaves had to travel to reach free states. Talk about the kinds of transportation used and the risks that were taken on the way.

5. Talk about where slaves were hidden on their journey to freedom, the secret rooms, and signals used, and the wagons with false bottoms or loads of hay to hide slaves. Discuss the courageous people who helped bring the slaves to free states.

6. Look at the Declaration of Independence. What did the authors mean when they wrote, “All men are created equal”? Did they mean to include slaves? women? What are “inalienable rights?” Discuss why the South needed slaves to work on the plantations.

7. How did the play make the children feel? Talk about how the actors assume different roles (characters) and how a play is different from a movie. Ask the children what they think happened in the lives of the characters after the action of the play.

Bibliography

THE BLACK AMERICANS: A HISTORY IN THEIR OWN WORDS*

Milton Meltzer

CAPTIVE BODIES, FREE SPIRITS*

William J. Evitts

IF YOU TRAVELED ON THE UNDERGROUND RAILROAD*

Ellen Levine

THE PEOPLE COULD FLY: AMERICAN BLACK FOLKTALES*

Virginia Hamilton

SLAVE DANCER*

Paula Fox

THE STORY OF HARRIET TUBMAN - FREEDOM TRAIN*

Dorothy Sterling

SPIN A SOFT BLACK SONG*

Nikki Giovanni

YOUNG FREDERICK DOUGLAS, FIGHT FOR FREEDOM.*

Lawrence Santrey

